The day's play brought the chart down to the semi-finals in both the singles and doubles, and the committee announced Tuesday evening that the schedule prepared for today (Wednesday) would bring to an end the best tournament the Inter-Mountain association has ever held.

Perhaps T. C. Bundy and his partner, Trow Hendricks, who have within the past few weeks successfully annexed the scalps of the eastern, western, southern and Pacific coast champions, and who only succumbed to the national champions, Harkett and Alexander, were the magnets that attracted attention.

This pair got real action once during the day when they stopped the upward career of O J. Salisbury and Sam Neel, the local team in the doubles, which is strong enough to win most or any fournament in this part of the country. The gallery was at its best when this quartette of tennis experts began work.

T. C. Bundy gave an inkling here and there in the match of just what he could do with a tennis racquet when called upon to defend his many titles. He gave several glimpses of that famous service twist that puzzled the eastern cracks. In fact, he did not lose a serve during the match. The local boys could not selve it and many a point went to the visitor on this account. While Hendricks's serve was more easily handled,
